Concept Note

Literature and Cinema are not just two acknowledged mediums of human expression which frequently interact, but there is a sophisticated technology involved in translating the former into the latter. From the use of moving pictures on screen as far back as 1888, to the advanced CGI that makes Rudyard Kipling's characters come to life, technology has enabled the journey between literary creation and visualization. This intersection of literature, cinema and technology has of late found its place in a pedagogical system beyond the curriculum of film studies, in the Undergraduate and Postgraduate programmes of literature. However, the focus is less than adequate. This webinar therefore, to the best of its scope, seeks to explore the interface of Literature and Cinema in its variegated forms.
